FAQs

Does a release into secondary containment constitute a reportable release?

Yes. Any release from the primary containment vessel into a secondary containment area is considered a release or a threatened release to the environment. If the primary containment vessel and the secondary containment area are located inside a building that would not reach the outside environment, then the spill is not reportable.

How large does a spill have to be to contact the AOC?

Any spill larger than one gallon must be called into the AOC.

What happens if I do not report a release?

Under Kentucky law, a non-reported release could result in a fine up to $25,000 per day per violation.
